

D. The Relationship 4Ps Support and Its Level of Effectiveness

There is no significant relationship between the respondents' view on the 4Ps support and the level of effectiveness on social welfare and development of its beneficiaries. This means that the assessment of the respondents to the level of effectiveness on social and development of beneficiaries is independent from the assessment of the respondents on the 4Ps support.

IV. CONCLUSIONS

In the context of the findings of the study, the following conclusions are drawn:

- Most of the beneficiaries met the requirements set by the 4Ps and they are qualified enough to become beneficiaries of the program,
- The 4Ps support given to its beneficiaries are in accordance with the Department of Social Welfare and Development's mission to provide social protection and promote the rights and welfare of poor, vulnerable and disadvantaged individuals, families and communities contributing to poverty alleviation and empowerment,
- 4Ps is effective in developing human capital as reflected by promotion of parent empowerment and realization of their full potential as members of the family and of the society, improvement of children's health, and enhancement of children's school attendance and grades,
- Lastly, 4Ps support and the level of effectiveness on social welfare and development is independent to each other.
